Empowering Black Kids/Kids of Color! Empowerment-Workshop for Black parents and parents of Color*

How can Black parents/parents of Color strengthen their kids in their identity in a predominantly white society? How can they offer empowering support to their children in their struggle with experiences of rejection and discrimination? How can they protect themselves and their children against subtle and offensive everyday racism?

This workshop offers parents the opportunity to address these and many other questions in a safe space and develop strategies to empower their children and their families.

Trainers: Tupoka Ogette & Stephen Lawson

Experts for diversity and anti-discrimination, trainers for anti-racism, diversity and empowerment

*The term „Black“ does not refer to an alleged skin color. It is rather a political and a self-chosen term of people with similar shared experiences of racism. „People of Color“ is a self-chosen term of and for people, who are not white. The concept „People of Color“ implies that people who are not white share a range of experience in a predominantly white society.
